Singular Story.

Two young men giving the names of Edward D. Curran and John H. Sciever, asked for lodging at the First Precinct Station, Washington, Saturday night. The station-keeper was about to lock them up for the night when Sergeant Boyle, struck by the intelligent faces of the youths, called them back and began to question them. Curran said that he was a telegraph operator, eighteen years old, and is employed at 195 Broadway, New York, in the Produce Exchange. The other lodger said he was seventeen years old. Both came originally from Atlanta, Ga. The Curran boy stated that he had a brother living there. They left New York October 6th for Atlanta, and on reaching Baltimore they found that they had several hours to lay over and they left the Union depot to see a little of the city. While sauntering around they met a natty dressed young man, who asked them if they were not strangers. They replied that they were from Atlanta, when he said that his people were from that place, but he had lived in Baltimore for a long time. The man got from them the story of returning home and other facts connected with their names, when he told them he was the owner of a yacht, was about to make a trip to Norfolk and invited them to go that far with him. The idea was eagerly caught at by the boys, and they started out to take a view of the boat. Upon getting on board the captain was introduced as Captain W. M. Phillips and the mate as L. A. Adams, who seemed rejoiced at their visit. The natty young man made some excuse and went ashore, and, upon invitation from the captain, the two young Georgians went down below to further inspect the boat. When they again appeared on deck the sloop or yacht was well out in the bay, and, with all sails spread, was rapidly leaving Baltimore behind. Upon asking for an explanation the two boys were fiercely attacked by the captain, who struck them with a belaying pin, and then had them thrust down into the hold. They remained there for two days, when they were pulled out and ordered to go to work dredging oysters. They then realized that they were "kidnapped" for the purpose of being made to work on an oyster schooner, and that they had to do everything in order or submit to the most cruel treatment from the captain. They found that the name of the sloop was Annie M. Haywood, and Joe Smith, the colored steward, told them that they were in Hunger's river, near the little town of Crapo. The young men found that they were closely watched, and had no way to escape, for when off dredging the captain sat on the side of the sloop ready to shoot in case they tried to get away. The steward (Smith) spoken of above was taken sick, and became totally unable to do any work, and, being asked by the captain if he could throw the dredge, said he didn't know but would try. He did so and made a bad failure, for which the captain struck him in the breast with a club, breaking his ribs in three places, then threw him down the hold, where he lay without treatment for two days. On the third day the captain ordered him out, and in attempting to get up he fainted away, which so exasperated the captain that he threw a bucket of water over him. That afternoon the captain hoisted the steward out, placed him on his dry, and, getting in himself, said he was going to Crapo for medical assistance for the sick man. He returned that evening, but was alone. Three days after this the captain and mate got into a drunken stupor, and the boys seized the opportunity of slipping overboard, started shoreward, and after several mishaps reached the little town Curran sought out the telegraph operator, and to him related his case, who financially helped him. The operator said that the captain of the sloop never came ashore with the sick man, and the inference is that the captain drowned him.

The story of their escape is very thrilling. They were compelled to swim a mile before reaching land, and then lost all their clothing. The timely aid of a telegraph operator at Crapo saved the boys from a terrible suspense of mind. Investigation so far has sustained the boys' stories.

A BRIDE'S FATE.—Miss Birdie Meyberg, a prominent and beautiful belle of St. Louis, was paralyzed in that city under most remarkable circumstances. She was engaged to be married on the 14th of November to Alfred Gensfeld, of Albuquerque, N. M. The wedding was to have been celebrated in elaborate style, and Miss Meyberg and her mother were engaged in making purchases for the happy event. On Thursday last Mrs. Meyberg and her daughter were shopping in the principal stores of St. Louis and finally entered a store on Franklin avenue. Mrs. Meyberg left her daughter for a few minutes, and the young lady called for some slippers. She was leaning over, trying on her wedding slippers, when she fell over in an apparent stupor. The clerks thought the young lady had fainted, and applied cold water to her face, but she did not revive. A hack was summoned and the unconscious girl was carried to her home. Mrs. Meyberg returned to the store, ignorant of what had occurred. One of the clerks told her that her daughter had dropped dead. The poor mother was almost overcome, but regained her composure and was soon by the bedside of the unconscious girl. Several physicians were summoned, and after a long consultation they decided that Miss Meyberg's right side had been paralyzed, and gave as their opinion that it was caused by a rush of blood, caused by over excitement. The young lady is still unconscious, and there is little hope of her recovery. Her intended husband is on his way from Albuquerque to St. Louis, but knows nothing about the pitiable condition of his fiancée.

$500 Not Called For.

It seems strange that it is necessary to persuade men that you can cure their diseases by offering a premium to the man who fails to receive benefit. And yet Dr. Sage undoubtedly cured thousands of cases of obstinate catarrh with his "Catarrh Remedy," who would never have applied to him, if it had not been for his offer of the above sum for an incurable case. Who is the next bidder for cure or cash.
